章节摘录

Feeling for the grass-edge of the path with his toes , he reached inside another window further along the wall , where he had left his gun the night before . The steel was icy , and his numb fingers slipped along it so that he had to hold the gun under his arm for safety . Then he tiptoed to the room where the dogs slept . He was worried that they might have been tempted to go before he came , but they were waiting for him , sitting up on the cold floor restless to go . When they saw the gun they began swinging their tails excitedly , but his warning whisper kept them secret and silent till they were hundred Yards away from the house : then they rushed off into the bush , barking with delight . The boy imagined his parents turning in their beds and muttering : Those dogs again ! Before they were dragged back into sleep ; and he smiled scornfully . He always looked back over his shoulder at the house before he passed the line of trees that shut it from sight . It looked so low and small under the tall and brilliant sky . Then he turned his back on it and on his sleeping parents , and forgot them .
