章节摘录

Consulting is the business of providing advice to clients for a fee in order to help them solve a particular problem or range of problems within a certain area of business. Consulting services are provided by consultants, a majority of whom have gained their expertise from previous employment. Management consulting grew with the rise of management as a unique field of study. Management consulting has grown quickly, with growth rates of the industry exceeding 20% in the 1980s and 1990s. In 2007, total global revenues for management consulting are expected to exceed the $300 billion mark. Management consulting is becoming more prevalent in non-business related fields as well as the need for professional and specialized advice grows, other industries such as government, quasi-government and not-for-profit agencies are turning to the same managerial principles that have helped the private sector for years. The consulting+ market continues to explode, as consultants have become a necessity in today's constantly changing business landscape. Even individuals are seeking the help of consultants, such as choosing the right financial instrument for retirement savings.
