章节摘录

版权页：插图：The well we had come to was not at all like the wells of the Sahara. The wells of the Sahara are no more than holes dug in the sand. This one looked more like a village well. But there was no village here, and I thought I was dreaming. "It's strange," I said to the little prince, "everything is ready for use: the pulley, the bucket, and the rope... He laughed, grasped the rope, and set the pulley working. And the pulley groaned '3) the way an old weathervane groaned when the wind has been asleep a long time." "Hear that ?" said the little prince. "We've awakened this well and it's singing..." I didn't want him to tire him out. "Let me do that," I said to him. "It's too heavy for you."
