章节摘录

版权页：插图：Jeremy lived at Blue Lagoon, so snorkeling was something he did nearly every warm sunny day. Only a kilometer off shore was Rainbow Island. For many years, Jeremy had watched groups of people hire his dad's dive boat and visit the island to scuba dive. Often he would go along for the ride and join in the fun of the day. Six months ago a couple hired the boat to go to the island to dive on the reef. They agreed to take Jeremy along to act as guide and look after the boat while they dived. As always, spare equipment was carried, just in case it was needed. Everything was going well ——the water was calm and warm and the adults were soon exploring the wonderland below. After half an hour had passed, Jeremy thought he would do a little snorkeling and see if he could spot the scuba divers returning to the boat as they had only taken half an hour tanks. Nothing prepared him for what he saw! On the sea floor, ten meters below, lay the forms of two people, kicking their legs and with their tanks caught in the tentacles of the tall seaweed that grew in the area. They didn't carry a knife and were trapped. He knew they would run out of air if he didn't go to their rescue. Jeremy was only fourteen and had never scuba dived before. But he had seen the scuba gear used often and had practised in his mind how to use the equipment. He put on the lead weight belt, checked his flippers, slipped on the spare air tank and checked the regulator and air level—it was full. He pulled on his face mask and tumbled over the edge of the boat. As he sank toward the struggling pair, he reached for his knife to cut the seaweed. You can imagine Jeremy's reception when surfaced and boarded the dive boat. Jeremy is an instant hero.
