章节摘录

版权页：插图： The Concept of a Scenic Area A scenic area refers to a state-named area with beautiful environment, spots of interest, and conditions for tourism development, for sightseeing, relaxation or scientific and cultural activities. It corresponds to national parks in some other countries. The sign of the scenic area is composed of images and words. The images include the Great Wall, mountains and rivers, which symbolize the long history and natural landscape, ginkgo leaves and tea leaves, which symbolize the beautiful and ecological environment and plants. Words on the sign read "NATIONAL PARK OF CHINA". To ensure a scientific administration of various kinds of scenic spots and avoid the destruction of tourist resources, the governments at different levels put them under their unified management. The State Council of China identified six lists of national scenic areas respectively in 1982, 1988, 1994, 2002, 2004 and 2005. Up to December 2009, China has identified 208 national scenic areas. Huanglong Scenic and Historic Interest Area Situated in the northwest of Sichuan Province, the Huanglong valley is made up of snow-capped peaks and the easternmost of all the Chinese glaciers. In addition to its mountain landscape, diverse forest ecosystems can be found, as well as spectacular limestone formations, waterfalls and hot springs. The area also has a population of endangered animals, including the giant panda and the Sichuan golden snub-nosed monkey. Wulingyuan Scenic and Historic Interest Area Located in the northwest of Hunan Province, it was listed as a World Natural Heritage in 1992 by UNESCO. The area is a natural zoological and botanical garden as well as a geological park. These scenic sites all feature strange peaks, secluded caves, limpid streams and thick forests. Zhangjiajie Scenic Site, located in the center of Wulingyuan Natural Resort, is the first national forest park in China, where are strange peaks, bizarre boulders, springs and flying cataracts, thick woods with old, precious trees, and rare birds and beasts.
