章节摘录

版权页：插图：which someone is injured. Numerous other mnemonics and variants on the ABC of first aid exist, but it is probably the most useful one for lay people to remember. The letters stand for Airway, Breathing and Circulation, also referred to as the vital signs. If all of the vital signs are monitored and addressed, an injured has a much better chance of surviving until help arrives. When using the ABC of first aid, the first thing to do is check the patient's airway. If someone's throat is blocked, he or she will be unable to breathe. If the patient is unconscious, you can ask the patient to talk to you. If the patient is unconscious, lift his or her chin and tilt the head back. Do this carefully, as you may aggravate spinal and neck injuries by manipulating the head. Sweep the back of the mouth with a finger to check for obstructions if you suspect that someone may have a compromised airway. Next, check for breathing. Place your face close to the patient's mouth to listen and feel for breathing, or use an object like a mirror. If the patient is breathing, the breath will condense on the mirror. If the patient is not breathing, according to the ABC of first aid, you need to correct the problem before moving on to the next step. Administer rescue breathing and CPR until the patient is breathing again.
