章节摘录

版权页：At G20 summits and other relevant multilateral high level meetings, Chinese leaders and government delivered various important speeches, in an effort to effectively protect the interests of China and that of the countries across the world, elaborate China's policy stands vis-a-vis the reform of the international financial institution, with emphasis on stepping up the international oversight mechanism, guarding against trade protectionism, and giving special attention to the protection of the developing countries. China attached importance to the revision of the existing international game rules, and actively promoted the establishment of the new global order that is over due, in an effort to tap into the advantages while avoiding disadvantages and creating a best possible international and surrounding environment for its domestic development. On various occasions, China's policy goals, principles and concrete policy measures vis-a-vis the financial crisis and the reform of the current international financial institutions received positive responses from the attendees. More importantly, China played a constructive role in the institutionalization of G20, which would convert it into an formal platform for the reform of the international financial institutions, an important forum for global economic and financial dialogues and cooperation, demonstrated its image as a responsible major emerging country ready for international cooperation and managing common challenges, and further elevated China's status in the field of international game rules.
