前言

In the long process of China's several-thousand-year history and culture, auspicious words and designs have remained the most popular content and forms loved by the Chinese people and known by every household. They have taken a deep root among the people. For instance, spring festival couplets, the character of ( happiness ), and paper-cuts are pasted on door panels and windows at all households to bid farewell to the outgoing year, ring in the new year, and pray for the arrival of happiness at the doorway. On New Year's Day, people greet one another by saying "May you be happy and prosperous, " or "Happy New Year. " When a relative or a friend goes out on a journey, one may wish him or her a "safe trip or "goodluck. " When a man and a woman get married, people extend congratulations, wishing them to "remain devoted to "bethe end of their lives" or a happy marriage. " When an elder celebrates his or her birthday, the juniors wish him or her to "live a life as long as South Mountain" or "enjoy both felicity and longevity. " When one opens a business, one's friends wish "one's source of wealth is abundant, "and "one makes a dipperful gold as daily profits. " In this way, people express their desires for auspiciousness and happiness.

章节摘录

插图：It is an auspicious design created in ancient China. The term of flying angel is from Buddhism, which says there are eight gods that support Buddhism. One of which is the flying angel, or Gandhava in Sanskrit, living in South Vajraon Sumeru. It is also known as the Goddess of Fragrant Sound, because it touches neither wine nor meat but only smells fragrance. When the Heavenly God wants to make merry, the flying angel reveals itself in different appearances and dances in the air with a musical instrument in hand. Hence it is also called the Goddess of Heavenly Music, The Flying Angel of Music and Dance, or the Goddess Soaring in the Sky. It is a symbol of happiness and auspiciousness in Buddhism. The design of the flying angel has different features at different times. In the early days of the Wei Dynasty (386-534), it was designed as a female or male with a round face and shorter floating ribbons. During the Eastern (534 - 550) and Western (535 - 556) Wei dynasties and the Northern Qi Dynasty (550-557), it tended to be fine and delicate in features with longer floating ribbons, which enhanced the sense of flying, a phenomenon related to moral values in society at that time. In the heyday of the Tang Dynasty, designs of the flying angel appeared as a young girl with a well-shaped body and smoothly floating ribbons two to three times longer than its height. Various images of the flying angel can be found from the murals in the Dunhuang, Yungang, Longmen, and Gongxian County grottoes.
