章节摘录

Our Textile Industry Is Marching on Continuously Before liberation, the textile industry of our country was very backward. Textile machines, even some materials, had to be imported from abroad. Since the founding of New China, especially since 1979, we have made greater achievements in this branch of industry. A large number of cotton mills, printfaetorle, arid texti; le machinery plants have ting and dyeing been built one after another all over the country. Modern and excellent machines such as spinning frames, automatic or shuttless looms, rotary screen printing machines and the others have been made to meet the demands of the rapid development of the four modernizations. Now the textile industry has become one of the largest industries in China. Its products have got vast markets both at home and abroad. China's textile industry output in the first half of 1992 was valued at 114billion Yuan (US $22.12 billion), with business reezrrding-records pre-,tax profits of 1.54 billion Yuan (US $ 299 million) despite a trend towards higher raw material prices and short supplies. We are sure that the textile industry will make still greater contributions to our socialist motherland and the world. The achievements that we have made are marvellous indeed, but compared with developed countries products, we still have a tong way to go. Therefore science and technology must be developed so as to catch up with the advanced world level.
