<<中国的礼仪>>

内容概要

Now again as in the past when China was in its prime , the world find it impossible to overlook China and its people. However , for its many sufferings in pre-modern and modern history of social unrest and setbacks , natural disasters and social misfortunes , China has for a long time remained relatively backward , listed as a "developing country" of the world. And for the same reason , The Chinese people and their civilization have been neglected in the developed countries , and what is now known of China to quite many people in the West remains to be what it was 30 or 50 years ago.

章节摘录

Clothes are mainly used to cover the body , for decoration and against the cold. But the gorgeous ancient Chinese costume also embodied the ritual system of life with its strict hierarchy and strong spirit of unification. In the past dynasties definite and strict regulations were provided for the costume of people ranging from emperors and officials to ordinary persons. Everyone should be dressed in conformity with his own status and so it would be easy to distinguish , from the costume , monarch and subject , the male and the female , master and servant , and officials and common people. Therefore , to Chinese people , clothing could also be taken as a ritual expression rather than the mere embodiment of freedom and comfort. Generally speaking , the distinction between common people and the aristocracy was reflected by the length of clothes. Laborers wore shorter clothes with simple colors and decorative patterns , while nobles wore richly ornamented long clothing , graceful and poised. It was forbidden to wear clothes unsuitable for one's own sex. The Chinese costume system experienced a clear evolution and appeared differently in each period of history. As early as in the times of the Yellow Emperor , the clothing system came into being. The combination of the dark upper garment and the yellow lower one was the emblem of heaven and earth , for the heavens are dark before dawn and the earth was yellow. Rooted in nature-worship , this concept had a profound impact on the subsequent clothing system. After the class society began , with the formation and establishment of Patriarchal The costume of the emperors of Qing Dynasty , in yellow color and dragon designs that are exclusively used.
