章节摘录

In recent years, writing has become more and more important in college education. Professor Li Funing from Peking University once made the remark, “ Every course is a writing course ” (1991). As an English major, in your first three years at college you have probably written many personal essays in English that presented your thoughts, feelings, and opinions. As you start your fourth year, you are facing a variety of writing tasks which become progressively more complex and demanding. Different from those types of writing you have learned, you are now going to learn how to write “ academically ” . Before we begin, it will be helpful to discuss what are the major types and features of academic writing.
