章节摘录

版权页：The term “ Romanticism ” did not arise until the Victorian period. Nonetheless , poets such as William Wordsworth were actively engaged in trying to create a new kind of poetry that emphasized intuition over reason and the pastoral over the urban , often eschewing modern forms and language in an effort to use “ new ” language. Wordsworth defined good poetry as “ the spontaneous overflow of powerful feelings ” . Samuel Taylor Coleridge , another prominent romantic poet and critic in his Dictionary of Poesy or Art sees art as “ the mediatrix between , and reconciler of nature and man ” . Such an attitude reflects the dominant theme of romantic poetry : the filtering of natural emotion through the human mind in order to create art. Coupled with an awareness of the duality created by such a process. Realism often refers more specifically to the artistic movement which began in France in the 1850s. These realists positioned themselves against romanticism , a genre dominating French literature and artwork in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Purporting to be undistorted by personal bias , Realism believed in the ideology of objective reality and revolted against the exaggerated emotionalism of the Romantic Movement. Truth and accuracy became the goals of many realists. Realism in the visual arts and literature refers to the general attempt to depict subjects in accordance with secular , empirical rules , as they are considered to exist in third person objective reality.
