章节摘录

Questions 21-25 "Youre off to the World Economic Forum ?

" asked the Oxford economist, enviously. "Howvery impressive. Theyve never invited me."

Three days later, I queued in the snow outside the conference center in Davos, standing behind mink coats and cashmere overcoats, watched over by Swiss policemen with machineguns."Reporting press ?

You cant come in here. Side entrance, please." I stood in line again, thistime behind PMfa jackets and Newsweek journalists, waiting to collect my orange badge. Onceinside. I found that the seminar I wanted to go to was being held in a half-empty room. "Youcant sit here. All seats are reserved for white badges. Coloured badges have to stand."

An acquaintance invited me to a dinner he was hosting. "There are people Id like you tomeet." The green-badged Forum employee stopped me at the door. "This is a participantsdinner. Orange badges are not allowed." Then, later, reluctantly. "If youre coming in. pleasecan you turn your badge around ?

Dinners may be upset if they see youre a colour." "Why does anyone put up with being treated like this ?

" I asked a Financial Timescorrespondent. "Because we all live in hope of becoming white badges," he said. "Then wellknow whats really going on." A leading British businessman was wearing a white badge, but it bore a small logo on the topleft-hand corner. GLT. "Whats a GLT ?

" I asked. Ah, he said. "well, its a Davos club. Im a Global Leader for Tomorrow."

"That sounds very important," I said. "Yes." He said, "I thought so myself until I bumpedinto the man who had sponsored me. On the way to my first meeting. I asked him if he wascoming, and he said, "Oh no, dear boy, I dont bother with that any longer. Im not a GLT anymore Im an IGWEL." "Whats an IGWEL ?

" I asked him. "A member of Informal Group ofWorld Economic Leaders of Today."
