内容概要

Chinese Phonetics is the study of the Chinese phonetic system and its structure and rules. Chinese Phonetics is characterized by syllables. The structure of Chinese Phonetics is simple , syllable boundaries clear , and tone is an important component of syllables. Chinese syllable structure has a strong regularity. The vowel is generally an indispensable element of a syllable , and a syllable has a maximum of three consecutive vowels. Consonants go in front of vowels , which is the beginning of syllables. Only a few consonants can come after vowels , that is at the end of syllables. Vowels commonly only have one consonant before or after.
