章节摘录

The paper was completed on the basis of copying and collation of 270 title deeds for shops in Beijing during the Qing Dynasty. A brief table of title deeds for shops is attached at the end of the paper. These title deeds serve as a source material of the shops. The quantity of shop title deeds through the Qing Dynasty , identities of the two parties involved in the deeds , locations and business scope of the shops could provide a picture of commercial layout and situations of commodity management in various periods of the Qing Dynasty in Beijing. For instance , during the reigns of emperors Shunzhi , Kangxi and Yongzheng , there were very few shop title deeds in the urban area of Beijing and in late Qianlong and Jiadao times , the distribution of shops in the inner city expanded and the commercial hubs centered with the Dongsi Archway and the Xisi Archway had taken shape. The title deeds show that most (52%) of the shops had less than 10 rooms , and even had only 1 or 2 rooms. It is thus clear that business people (or craftsmen) in the capital did business with small capital and their life was not easy. The Qing Dynasty witnessed many important historical events. The title deeds for shops in the capital did not mention any major historical events except for the War of 1900. This war and its consequent losses were often mentioned about. We can see that this great calamity most seriously damaged the socio-economic and commercial facilities in Beijing and did the most serious harm to people of various strata in Beijing since the beginning of the Qing Dynasty.
