章节摘录

Inspector Temple looked carefully at the body slumped across the kitchen table. The head lay on its side; the wide eyes stared across the remains of a bachelor breakfast. About thirty-five. Male. Well-dressed. Average build. Some letters lay open at his side. Temple put his gloves on and looked through the letters slowly, picking up each one by its corner. An advertisement for life insurance, a leaflet advertising a sale in a department store, a free magazine. Just junk mail. I've got a key, you see, and I didn't see Ron for three days so I came to check that everything was all right. We used to watch each other's houses, you know and he always tells me if he's going away - I feed the cat. An envelope lay ready for posting on one of the chairs. Readers Offers, PO Box 29, London NW70X2. A printed address. Temple opened it. Huh, he murmured. He's just won a prize in some competition. It won't be much good to him now!

A constable walked into the kitchen. A cat followed close behind. No sign of anything, sir. The doors and windows weren't forced. Everything's tidy in the other rooms. It doesn't look like a burglary. Did he have many visitors, Mrs ... McCarthy?

Well, I don't think so. He was a quiet man. He didn't talk a lot about personal things, you know. But he was nice.., very polite and quite friendly. Right. Well, we'd better get the forensic team in here to have a look around. Mitchell, can you arrange it?

And make sure nobody touches anything before they get here. Looks like a heart attack to me, though.
