章节摘录

Step 1 Decide what you want to relate to your audience. Remember that lecturing is telling the people what they are going to see, showing it to them and explaining what they just saw, along with allowing discoveries to make along the way. Step 2 Prepare your opening point form in advance. Concisely state the topic, issue or problem that forms the subject of your talk. Then prepare an outline with the information you will discuss and include supporting data (or all your sub-points). Prepare your [inal over-head statement list, which should contain no more than four points that you want the audience to remember. If you are doing your job right, the middle sections should relate to your opening segment and support your final conclusions. Step 3 Practice the lecture for timing. If your practice takes 45 minutes, and you have that amount of time to talk, shorten the presentation to 30 or 35 minutes. Prepare some emotionally-driven material relevant to the lecture material and insert it. Move the audience emotionally with humor or sentiment, and they will open up their ears to what you have to say.
